British Film Culture in the 1970s

The Boundaries of Pleasure
Sue Harper and Justin Smith

This volume draws a map of British film culture in the 1970s, providing a long-awaited and authoritative history of the period. The culmination of an AHRC-funded project at the University of Portsmouth, this study locates British cinema socially and explores its cross-cultural relationship with other media, including popular music and television. The analysis covers mainstream and experimental film cultures, identifying their production contexts, economic bases and taste-communities.

The book's structure suggests ways of thinking about cultural history afresh. The essays in Part I have been contributed by members of the project, and illustrate the diversity of the moving image culture of the period. In Part II, Sue Harper and Justin Smith investigate how gender relations and social space were addressed in film. A shared visual manner and performance style is shown to characterise this fragmented cinema, and irony and anxiety suffuse the whole film culture. This comprehensive examination charts the shifting boundaries of permission in 1970s film culture, and its re-definition of notions of visual pleasure.

Contributors include: Dave Allen, University of Portsmouth; Sian Barber, Royal Holloway, University of London; Peri Bradley, Southampton Solent University and Bournemouth University; Laurie N. Ede, University of Portsmouth; Laurel Forster University of Portsmouth; Vincent Porter, University of Portsmouth; and Sally Shaw, University of Portsmouth.
